

Science Societies

Science at risk: How federal research cuts threaten agricultural policy

August 15, 2025

ASA, CSSA, and SSSA held a webinar on August 13 that focused on the impacts of recent and proposed budget cuts to the research arms of federal agencies. These changes have critical implications for science-based policy development, implementation, and the overall research capacity in agronomy, crop science, and soil science. Our panelists reviewed the state of the situation and how it has impacted them and their organizations from academic and private-sector positions.

If you missed the live webinar, you can still view the recorded version.

Want more policy news?

Bookmark our Science Policy page to stay up to date on the latest developments in DC.

Text © . The authors. CC BY-NC-ND 4.0. Except where otherwise noted, images are subject to copyright. Any reuse without express permission from the copyright owner is prohibited.